

General enquiries about Fleet should be directed to:-
Fleet Parish Clerk - fleetparishcouncilclerk@gmail.com
Mobile Contact 07548 648502

A Description of Fleet in Lincolnshire

This work is dedicated to the memories of Alf Halgarth and his sister Joan Evans RIP.

Acknowledgments and special thanks to Duncan Woolard MBE, Tony Worth, Bill Belsham, Dr Dorothy Owen, Miss Elizabeth Snushall, Ken Read for his highwayman, Miss E Walton, Mr & Mrs Pearson, George Smith, Rev R Goddard, Prof Harper Bill, The British Library for permission to reproduce pages from the Castle Acre Cartulary, The British Academy & Oxford University Press for use of the 1316 Terrier, Lincolnshire County Archives, The Lincoln Record Society, English Heritage, The Librarian at Mount Holyoke College USA, and many others without whom this would not have been possible.

Please direct complaints or comments to Joan Woolard at joanwoolard38@gmail.com who is wholly responsible for the content and offers abject apologies for any errors, omissions or presumptions. JW 2009

Fleet is at first glance a typical East Midlands fenland village in south Lincolnshire stretching from the salt marshes of the Wash deep into the Anglian fens. Norfolk and Cambridgeshire are closer than Lincoln some 60 miles distant. The Meridian passes through Fleet Fen, marked by a stone on Langarygate; a bench memorialises a young girl with a terminal condition who found solace at this spot before she died tragically in October 2009. Nearly 12 miles long but only 2 miles at its widest, the Fleet filtered as land was this former tidal some six miles top priority and South Holland virtually nil thanks to the price of freedom (from flooding) is eternal maintenance.

settlement northward reclaimed from inlet. The sea is now distant. Management of water levels is a continues today in the capable hands of Internal Drainage Board and flood risk is their sterling efforts. To coin a phrase,

The chief industry is farming of brassicas and potatoes for super-flowers are also grown, especially of some 1800 most are ancient coastal route known as the Fleet Hargate. An old rhyme arable crops like grain, markets; quantities of daffodils. Of the population concentrated around the Hergate, giving its name to records a hazardous past:

Be you going, be you coming, (rhymes with woman)
 B e you man, be you woman,
 Be you early, be you late,
 Be aware of Flete Hergate.

Described as “unprepossessing” by Pevsner in 1964, the main street (Old Main Road) has been much improved by the planting of Rowan trees and general repairs of high standard to properties in the Conservation Area starting at the Bull. In the 1970s the new A17 by-passed the village leaving it a quiet backwater within convenient distance of Spalding, King’s Lynn, Boston, Wisbech and Peterborough. Fleet Hargate enjoys half-hourly bus services and is popular with retirees as well as young families. Boasting clean air, low crime and easy walking, Fleet offers many advantages to the discerning parent or grandparent: a delightful village school with 135 children, a Grade I Listed church and adjoining Conservation Area, Seth’s Mobility, adult-only caravan park, plant nurseries and livery stables. Barely a mile northeast is Fleet Hargate with a second Conservation Area and 2 traditional pubs, Baptist Chapel, Post Office, plantsmen, hairdressers, restaurant, adult-only caravan park, nursing homes, playing field, A17 Farm Cafe opposite the Anglia Motel with garden centre and restaurant seating 500.

Electorally Fleet consists of Fleet Hargate and Fleet Fen wards represented on the Parish Council which meets six times a year at Fleet is in South Holland District, formerly Spalding. In Parliament Fleet is Member for South Holland and The Mary Magdalene has Sunday services at 3pm; Holy Trinity Catholic Church on other times. Fleet Baptist Choir sings at Mothers and Toddlers Group meet Thursday mornings at the Chapel Stables Hall; Fleet Welcome Group once a month at Hargate Close Community Centre on Wednesday evenings. Fleet Preservation Society holds fund-raising events for the benefit of church, school and community. Fenland Flywheelers enjoy winter lectures and summer rallies for tractor fans.

Hargate Close Community Centre. East Elloe, administered from represented by John Hayes, Deepings. The Parish Church of St 9.15; Baptist Chapel Sundays at Fleet Street Sundays 9.30 and hospitals and nursing homes.

The Fleet Dole is distributed twice a year to pensioners; the Deacon & Fairfax Educational Foundation offers help to students every autumn; The Fleet Parish Charity makes occasional grants. The Anglia Motel has many fundraising events for Royal British Legion and Veterans as well as RAF Cadets and other local charities. Every year a service of Remembrance is held at the War Memorial opposite the Bull.

Walks are many and varied but always on the level. Millennium Trails and other footpaths are much favoured by ramblers and amblers. A designated cycle route is enjoyed by many. Horse-riding is also popular. Wild flowers like red campion, borage, yellow flag and poppies adorn the dykes and summer verges. Birds in the area include skylarks, green woodpeckers, red kites, kingfishers, waterfowl and many others too numerous to famous wildfowling country familiar to Sir marsh guide, "Kenzie" Thorpe, embodiment goldfinches, mention. This is Peter Scott and his of the 'Lincolnshire Poacher' and a renowned naturalist in his own right as well as a gifted painter.¹

The largest multi-stemmed Western Red Cedar recorded in England adorns and perfumes the grounds of Hovenden House generous gift

Leonard Cheshire Foundation. Field

also once a Worth family home, home. Sir Arthur Longmore, present Lord Lieutenant of served his country with distinction dropping bombs by hand over the of the Worth family to the House on Old Main Road was now a wellregarded nursing maternal grandfather of the

Lincolnshire Tony Worth

as a pilot in World War One side of the aircraft.

More History

According to an eminent American scholar, "England possesses the most remarkable set of records...in the world".² Fleet in Lincolnshire can claim to be one of the most remarkably recorded English "vills". Records pertaining to Fleet exist from the 11th century through almost every century to the present day. The Black Death inevitably left gaps, decimating populations and leaving church towers incomplete as at nearby Gedney where a grand octagonal base was duncely capped. Enterprising fenmen called Gadd and Garn survived, the former in name only, the latter still garnering centuries later. A video of Fleet celebrated the Millennium and a new one records the decade's changes³.

Fleet was Anglo-Saxon for “place to which the tide flows”.⁴ The sea once flowed inland as far as the church to mingle with untidy watercourses.⁵ It is said underground freshwater still streams beneath the Hargate.⁶ A great source of wealth was salt from the swift tidal ingress.⁷ Fleet River is marked on old maps of the fen and ancient lock gates were found beneath Hallgate not far from Pinstock Lane (penstock=lock-gates).⁸ Air photos indicate a possible prehistoric salt industry in Fleet Fen.⁹ Early Iron Age pottery was found on the site of a tumulus near the church along with medieval shards.¹⁰ Complete pots of sophisticated

Romano-British design were excavated in the Fen and are in Spalding Gentlemen’s Society Museum. If Roman slaves cleared woods and embanked fens¹¹ this would account for the long arrow-straight roads in Fleet Fen. A map names the Ravens Bank as “Roman road”. Could Raven be a corruption of Roman as suggested by an early historian? Roman coins and boat timber were found near Ravens Clough on what is now Little South Holland Drain. “A curious Roman pitcher” was found beneath a cross near a chantry site¹² at Holbeach Hurn in 1828 and sent to Boston for safekeeping. Could the chantry have replaced a Roman shrine? Holy places were often respected and replaced by a symbol of the new religion by incomers.

It’s Grim up North following the Romans with fellow Norsemen who called roads “gates” (= gait). A depiction of a Viking warship in Stow Minster reminds us that the Lincoln diocese extended from the Humber to Dorchester near Winchcombe¹³ when water was the quickest way to travel. A family named Jekyl settled in the fen and gave their name to several roads.¹⁴ Bran’s Lands, like Ketel Abbey at Sutton, exist on an old map; Bran or Brand and Ketel are Scandinavian. Grymslond (Grimsland) still occurs in a 14th century manuscript about Fleet. Fleet was part of Elloe Wapentake marked by the unique heart-shaped Elloe Stone at Moulton. Wapentake was a Norse assembly, weapon-touch, friendly contact.

1066 and all flat Norman Conquest brought new drainage skills and feudal discipline. Domesday Book recorded Earl Ælfgar/Algar having lands at Fleet. Algar gave his name to Algarkirk and was Earl of Mercia, an area identical to the old Lincoln diocese before 1072. His father was Leofric, husband of the famous Lady Godiva. Fleet recorded 1 fishery and 2 salt-pans along with 500 acres of meadow compared with only 30 at Gedney, 80 at Holbeach; by 1316 there were over 70 saltpans and Fleet was the centre of the local industry.¹⁵ Voracious demands for fuel to evaporate salt stripped the land for miles around and caused many disputes over turf rights.¹⁶

Ancient anathema Richard of Fleet was lord of the manor, owing fealty ultimately to the Warennes in Norfolk.¹⁷ Possibly crippled by the expense of pilgrimage to the Holy Land required of every knight¹⁸, Richard's father Josce (or Joscelyn) had tried but failed to claim back Fleet church with its sizable income, given by Josce's father Fulk to Castle Acre priory¹⁹ about the time of the first Crusade in 1098. In 1189 Richard and several local lords invaded Crowland Abbey lands with 3000 men and began cutting down trees and digging turves.²⁰ It took Richard several years to pay heavily for the release of his daughter from a dubious "espousal", suggesting a shortage of ready cash. Nonetheless Richard's wife, Juliana, successfully pleaded with him for widows to be released from a tax on the death of their husbands.²¹ Richard's charter guaranteeing this exemption is described as "a fascinating charter" as it contains an almost extinct curse: "any infringers of this concession shall suffer perpetual anathema, and his ministers shall be death".²² Richard willed his with Judas the traitor and the devil and condemned to the torture of eternal body to Castle Acre.²³

Historians have speculated on the earthworks shown in a field between Torrington clearly visible near the to "Castelcroff" relating to appears in a Fleet land hospital with a chapel at near the marketplace.²⁶ that Richard's "castle" may have existed airphotos of the tumulus once standing in Lane and Bengate. A field system is suggested "motte & bailey". A reference "Dominus Laurencius de Holbeche" register of 1316.²⁴ Richard founded a Fleet.²⁵ The "chapel of Wynstowe" stood After the suppression of the Templars in 1309 all these possessions went to the Skirbeck Hospitallers.²⁷ Wynstowe gave its name to Winslowgate. The remains of the chapel are under the A17, Washway formerly known as Salteneygate (Salt island road)²⁸ leading from the Whaplode saltmarshes at Saracen's Head, no doubt named for a grizzly souvenir from a crusade displayed at a safe distance downwind of habitation. The Star and Lamb & Flag at Whaplode are crusader relics.

Templars Richard's daughter Sara married Thomas de Moulton who became a great landowner, royal justice and drainage enthusiast before his death in 1240.²⁹ Sheep replaced salt as a major source of income.³⁰ In 1205 Thomas was granted a market at Fleet by King John who made a similar grant to Gedney's lord for the same day; Thomas successfully challenged this royal 'mistake' and won the day for Fleet.³¹ In 1273 a later Thomas (of Gillesland, Lord of Holbeach) claimed 'wrecks of the sea from the said port of Flet'.³² To many "the desolate demon-haunted fens"³³ were places to avoid. The watery quagmire of winter tide and turf became welcome summer meadow where a yearly Templars' Fair was recorded in 1185, the only one in Elloe.³⁴ Leland recorded Fleet's fair "on St Magdalen's Day";³⁵ this would have been 22nd July when large areas of marsh had dried out sufficiently to support large numbers of people and horses (and carts). Castle Acre monks listed an interesting charter by Thomas son of Lambert of Moulton, Sara and Thomas of Moulton's grandson. Could the barn have been built on the site of the present Bull? Grant by Thomas son of Lambert of Moulton to Castle Acre, for salvation of his soul and those of his successors, of six acres of land in his marsh at Fleet, on which to build a barn in which their tithe of sheaves from Fleet may be stored, with right of free entry and exit for their carts and ploughs, and without there being any common right of pasture there. An annual fair would have needed dry storage space for all the goods to be sealed and sold, especially salt. It would also have been handy for the regular market.

It is likely that both Richard and Thomas were Knights Templar. The Templars were free of taxes and had many other privileges.³⁶ This elite band answered directly to the Pope and controlled most of the region with great efficiency.³⁷ Every year at an assembly the lord of the manor sealed the measures of salt³⁸ and other goods with a bubble of wax known as a “bull” giving its name to the place.³⁹ When Latin was finally discarded the original meaning was the Fleet River along Maisdyke (Templegate in 1316)⁴⁰ later called The Roundabouts. Richard’s donation of 50 acres to the Templars was the largest acreage recorded as a single gift in the region.⁴¹ Elloe villis grew very rich and Fleet was bigger than Spalding by 1260.⁴²

efficiency.³⁷
manor goods with a its name to discarded meaning was the Fleet 1316)⁴⁰ later

A battle between the Fletes and *Litelburies*⁴³ may have given its name to Battle Bridge and Battleford Hall (the old Rectory). Holbeach church contains the tomb of a medieval Littlebury whose name survives at the Medical Centre in Fishpond Lane, Holbeach.

Worth their Salt A land register of Fleet called a Terrier was made in the reign of King Edward II in 1316 and transcribed for publication in 1920 by an American scholar, Nellie Neilson, of Mount Holyoke College, Massachusetts. Having studied at Oxford and Cambridge Universities Professor Neilson became the first female president of the American Historical Association, highly regarded for her work on medieval economics.⁴⁴ The Terrier, written in medieval Latin, lists names and rentals at Fleet including salt pans and ‘place’ holders in apparently equal number. Did each salt pan support a market booth?

Market goods were many and varied: corn, malt, horses, mares, oxen, cows, skins, fresh, salted or tanned, fresh or salted meats, hogs, piglets, fresh or salted salmon, sheep, goats, pigs, fleeces, pelts, goats, deer, lamp skins, kids, hares, rabbits, foxes, cats, squirrels, bales of cloth, whole cloths, flax webs, canvas, worsted, Irish cloths, silk cloth, ‘chief’ of cendal afforced, casks of wine, casks of ashes, casks and loads of honey, sacks of wool, trusses and loads of cloth, hay, lead, tar, tallow and grease, wood, alum, both coperous and ‘vertegrece’, herrings, sand-eels, sea-fish, boards, millstones, turves, salt, steel cheese, butter, nails, iron for shoeing horses, and for clouting carts, tin, brass, copper, lime, flax, hemp and oil.⁴⁵ Carting such goods was an industry in itself.

Familiar names like Josie Neel, Robert Cott, William Brown spring from the page as if nothing has changed in seven hundred years; less familiar are Margareta Puddyng, Eudo Trol and Thomas Hodidodi although there is a reference to land known as Huddy Duddies in an auction notice of 1803. Perhaps there is an ancient connection with Oddo and Doddo, made Dukes of Mercia by the king according to Leland.⁴⁶ The Neals are still on Nealsgate; Mrs Neal gave lace-making demonstrations in Fleet church in recent years.

There is an intriguing reference to a “milkhous” and a Robertus Braunche,⁴⁷ probably connected to Branches Lane and a 1376 Purbeck marble monument to Robert Branche at Lynn.⁴⁸ Fleet Motstowe seemed to be the centre of the salt industry (Mot = meet, stowe = storage place) with jurisdiction over Holbeach and Gedney.⁴⁹ The market was close to the Hargate where there was also a toll (toloneum).⁵⁰ This no doubt paid for the upkeep of the wide causeway raised above the marsh and turnpiked four centuries later.⁵¹ The sixteenth century John Leland refers to Fleet market as existing in the recent past “in memoriam hominum” and a fair on St Magdalen’s Day.⁵² vulnerable to heavy Unwary travellers King John could here, creating urgent crossings. Uncertain crossings afforded and scavengers. causeway against long trek down Westgate, now

All Washed Up

Bridges were tides and storms. apart from the feckless have lost treasure need for safer tides and rickety rich pickings to thieves Building a reliable such hazards saved a Eastgate and back via defunct. For many years a small circular building known as Fleet Jail stood opposite the Bull; it was brick-built and windowless. Possibly it may also have served as the toll booth. The foundations of a new-build now occupy the site. Nearby was a pit handy for road repairs; it is now under the War Memorial. In the fen 240 acres of woodland were recorded: Dominus ccxl acras in Fletewode.⁵³ There was also a Litelwode of six acres.⁵⁴ In 2009 there is no wood.

What's in a Name? Professor Neilson probably never visited Fleet or perhaps she would not have confused gates and gotes;⁵⁵ gate means way whereas a gote is a gowt or floodgate (AS geotan).⁵⁶ A possible misinterpretation of "infra villam bulliatorum"⁵⁷ deserves further discussion. Long hours in the British Museum Reading Room would not be everyone's idea of a holiday but it was the Neilson vacation of choice - even in wartime - for this highly regarded American academic who did not marry. For light relief she enjoyed skating, skiing and mountain-climbing when not poring over musty documents poorly written in medieval pidgin-Latin.

Fuzziness about medieval names is easily understood when English was not yet fully fledged but a fascinating, if infuriating, hybrid medley. Clerks with dodgy scribal skills often mis-heard French or Latin names. A local accent could transform a "k" into a "g", as in Picot/Pigott, Jekyl/Jiggle, Hackbeach/Hagbeach. Some letters were interchangeable such as h, i, j, and w or v. A Viking lord called Sweyn became Swain before degenerating into Swine, possibly the revenge of the vanquished. An inky smudge could transmute an "o" into "a": William the Conqueror's trusted ally Croun, Craon, (and even Credun), could become Crone or Crane. The 1316 land held by *Laurence de Brexis*⁵⁸ transmuted into Breeches in 1731, Beausolace (possibly a distortion of Beaujolais) became Belsores, Belsshares, then Belchers.⁵⁹ An intriguing "Manor of Beausolace" in Lincolnshire was gifted by "Thomas de Multone the Elder" to his future daughter in law, Edmunda.⁶⁰

Other names invite speculation: Whittedike or Wythdyke in 1316 becomes Wheedyke in 1731 and Weydike now. Could this have originated as Withy-dyke, withies being willows? Withies were essential for many everyday objects from baskets to fences. Almost a continuation, Hurdletree Bank traverses Holbeach and Whaplode to Moulton. Both words "withy" and "hurdle" are Old English relating to willow and its uses.

Chuntries occur in several places hard to identify. They were built to commemorate loved ones and the bereaved paid to have prayers chanted for their souls by special priests. Payments in 1316 were made in several ways apart from salt with goods such as pepper, cumin or hens, or services as described by Neilson.⁶¹

Due to lack of male heirs Fleet had divided into three manors: Dominorum, FitzWalter and Harrington, each with their own hall. Salterns were still valuable. A “hill and yard” (hoga et area in 1316 Latin)⁶² supplied income and insurance against eternal damnation with regular supplies to various religious houses.⁶³ A saltern called “Devil’s Hill” gave its name to a drain still in existence in 2009. Wildfowl and fish provided a good living for the independent “fen slodger” who used stilts to get about. These “Fen Tigers” were even suspected of having webbed feet! At a time when swans were considered a right royal feast many rich people were granted the privilege of marking swans for their own use.⁶⁴ Religious houses and clerics including Skirbeck Hospitallers and Fleet parsons enjoyed such perks.

The 16th century John Leland’s survey for Henry VIII refers to Sir Thomas Moulton’s castle in the fen as a ruin. The Moulton family had found rich pickings in many places through various advantageous marriages. By a series of deft moves the first Thomas gained an empire of property and estates after taking wardship of two daughters of the Royal Justiciar Richard de Lucy, arranging their marriages to his sons before himself wedding their widowed mother on the death of his first wife, Sara. One of his descendants, also Thomas de Moulton, married into the wealthy and widespread de Vaux family⁶⁵ who probably gave their name to Foxes Low(e) Road in Holbeach as well as Vauxhall in London and elsewhere.

In 1563 a survey of Fleet bridges and drains for the Commissioners of Sewers was carried out.⁶⁶ No longer Latin, but quaint Elizabethan English was written as it was spoken: “A verdyth off the sewers off the dygraves inqueste wythe in the weapontade off Ellowe...” (A verdict of the sewers of the dykereeves’ inquest within the wapentake of Elloe). This is relatively easy reading and the real puzzle is the exact location of the various bridges and dykes. Boundaries remained largely unchanged for centuries. “ther ys within the towne of Flette viij brygkes” (there is within the town of Fleet 8 bridges). Reference is made to “the three lordes of Flette” (not to mention Olbyche). The survey is critical of standards of maintenance, finding many drains “deffectetyffe” and was probably needed after the dissolution of the monasteries led to the disappearance of many traditional institutions formerly taking care of land and people.

Vermuyden and his seventeenth century Dutch drainage engineers corrected much of the damage and almost completed the work of the Romans, Danes and Normans. New dykes created new lands rich in essential minerals for arable crops. Investment in newly reclaimed land was becoming fashionable among the well-to-do. Absentee landlords became common. Fleet land with its high returns was popular with the aristocracy and landed gentry.

An Elizabethan complaint about Fleet Haven receiving coal intended for Boston indicates the continuing existence of “said creake called fflate haven”.⁶⁷ Bricks would have been a useful cargo to replace the coal used to bake them. Early recycling destroyed “beacon hills” atop the Roman bank to reclaim their bricks⁶⁸ indicating a shortage at some point.

The Age of Enlightenment - for some, while others existed like troglodyte cave-dwellers in the gloom resulting from the embrickment of windows under a punitive Window Tax (1696-1851). Such homes were heavily dependent upon candles, also taxed.⁶⁹ A new Terrier of Fleet appeared in 1731,⁷⁰ coincidentally the same year a New Receiver General of the Window Tax was appointed at a grand salary of £400 a year⁷¹ and stagecoaches began linking places as never before, enabling the nationwide distribution of a new journal called The Gentleman's Magazine. The Bull was said to be such a link and tales abound of Dick Turpin stabling his horse there and hiding in the chimney. If only the 17th century staircase could speak!

This Terrier reads like a local “celeb” list of various lords and ladies and famous names like Joseph Banks (probably uncle of the great botanist born 1744); Maurice Johnson, founder of The Spalding Gentlemen's Society, second oldest learned society in England, co-founder with William Stukeley (also listed) of The Royal Society of Antiquaries; Samuel Frothingham, eminent Quaker mathematician and inventor of a unique clock. Eminent for less worthy reasons the Hervey/Harvey family including the Earl of Bristol owned land at Fleet. This notorious branch of the family was described later as having “300 years of ‘opulence, intrigue and scandal’”.⁷² Drugs were part of the family's downfall and it is possible opium was shipped through the Hervey's port of Bristol to Spalding, once described as “the opium capital of the fens”.⁷³ The opium derivative, laudanum, was much used in quelling dissent among the peasantry and also as a sedative called “Mr Godfrey's Cordial” for squalling babies left in the care of village crones while mothers toiled in the fields.⁷⁴ Curiously, opium was less expensive than imported rhubarb!⁷⁵

Mary Hervey/Harvey married Thomas Deacon of Peterborough who founded a school there. His name, (with Thomas Fairfax), is remembered in a Fleet educational trust and an impressive memorial in Peterborough cathedral. His widow Mary, referred to as “Widow Lady of the Dominorum Mannour” in the Terrier, left money for a school at Fleet with alms for the poor of the village. Her will is a telling description of eighteenth century furniture and fashions.⁷⁶ Another land holder was Abraham Deboo of Thorney who left £2 to “the ffrench poor of Thorney”⁷⁷ where memorials to French and Flemish drainage workers abound.

The renowned antiquary Revd William Stukeley described his childhood visits to the woods at Fleet from his home in Holbeach nearby.⁷⁸ Could these woods have been the remnants of the former 240 acres of woodland in 1316? The 1731 Terrier refers to 25 acres called Oakwood in that area held by Joseph Banks who had another 4 acres called Oakes near The Wood House. Another 15 or so acres of Woodground occur near Branches Lane. In 1803 an auction notice refers to two acres of woodland “with growing trees”. According to 20th century sources a 10 acre wood was cut down by a woman for her pigs on Hazelwood Lane at the turn of that century.

Cottages were owned by rich gentlemen such as William Embling/Emblem (whose name lives on coaches) and the eccentric Beaupre Bell who shared his Norfolk mansion with horses and other animals.⁷⁹

In 1731 there was a hill containing one rood near the Angel Inn; a marginal note has Saltern? It was held by Thomas Essington, the inn by John Green Esqr, the shortened term for Esquire. This was virtually an official term for a man who had enough money to warrant it and indicated the head of a household with social responsibilities. Nowadays it is used by American lawyers, male or female, to indicate their professional status. Another reference to a former saltern is near the church: Hill Pasture. Amidst Woodground is Devil's Hill, apparently in 1731 just a name rather than a working saltern; used as a southern location it has an intriguing opposite boundary point northward called Lumbard's Cross. There is a reference to Lombard's Cross in 1803. Jekyl becomes Jeggell in 1731 whereas Parson's Bottom and Doll's Pingle are names to conjure with!

As was the custom a barber-surgeon lived at the Bull; named Michael Johnson his headstone is in Fleet church. Perhaps there was a heightened demand for local surgery when Fleet Hargate was 'very dangerous for passengers' before being turnpiked in 1764.⁸⁰

Victorian Steam and Team A poster advertising an auction at the Bull in December 1803 includes the Rose & Crown and a brick yard on Lowgate as well as several "new inclosures suitable for building". New cottages included Jasmine Cottage on the Hargate in 1819, now Grade II listed. A new rectory was built to the design of Benjamin Ferrey in 1854 described by Pevsner as "forbidding"; it replaced an old "parsonage". Horse farms and blacksmiths were still commonplace. With few opportunities for work away from the village most people became farm labourers or domestic servants. Many people employed servants. With 24 rooms and 4 acres of gardens Fleet Rectory gave bed and board to a large team but security in old age was uncertain. In 1838 Reverend Dods had for his purchase of Fleet lands. His 20 year old wife, Mary, had died in 1812 leaving a baby daughter. Local tradition has it that on his instructions the school in the churchyard was "brick by brick" to the school moved

Hargate in 1842. The handsome Ivy

House was home to the new schoolmaster. The school is in the Conservation Area and was popular as "the Reading Room" for whist drives until sold in the early 1990s by the Church to a private buyer. A new school was built at Wood Lane in 1878 and another in Fleet Fen the same year.⁸¹

Two small cottages between the old school and Ivy House were later converted into one house. The Reverend Dods's daughter, Mary Stanger, wife of the Reverend Jerram, rewarded the loyalty of two servants with the generous gift of a cottage: after three decades of faithful service at the Rectory. Mr and Mrs Jackson were able to open a coffee shop at their new home, Carfax, on the corner of Lowgate and Hargate.⁸² A drinking trough outside Carfax and the village hall near the church were also believed to have been gifted to the village by Mary who died in 1854 within a year of her father. Living accommodation for two single people existed within the hall on either side. The hall with its “cottages” was sold in the early 1990s and converted into a house; monies from the sale went to the Fleet Parish Charity. Three other houses were built within the curtilage.

The impressive Holbeach Union Work House, Fleet Hospital, on Fleet Road described by Pevsner as “latish classical” opened in 1835; Grade 2 Listed, it is in a suspended state of conversion to apartments.

Other successful conversions include a barn now called Leadenham House and a chapel on Mill Bank featured in a property programme on Channel 5. Leadenham House is opposite Fleet House, formerly Beechurst, home of Miss Tinsley. Nearby is the General Baptist Chapel founded in 1681 and rebuilt in 1876.

The railway came to Fleet and opened up a world of possibilities with jobs away from the farm and days out. Produce could arrive in the capital fresh from field and fen. ‘Wild Goose Man’ Kenzie may have shot a few hundred brace of assorted game but Fleet Coy and Walton’s goose farm accounted for thousands of London dinners. A light railway was built to carry goods from Worth farms to the Great Northern and Midlands Railway station on Eastgate/Hallgate. Goods included milk from cows no longer seen at Fleet. A public house at the station was The New Inn. After closure it was The Old New Inn. A seventeenth century building, it was replaced with a fine new house in 2009. The station house became a private dwelling and the station yard a lorry park.

War and Peace A dairy operated from Winslowgate. Could this have occupied the same site mentioned in 1316? East Elloe Rural District Council Isolation Hospital was built in 1910 for 10 patients for £900 off the Washway/A17;⁸³it is now a private house. Over the old Bull pit were a hairdresser and cobbler. Across the road on the corner stood the War Memorial recording Fleet men who fell in the First and Second World Wars. The first to go to war from Fleet in 1939 late Alf Halgarth who survived injury Parish, District and County Councils. “the last Ran Tan in Lincolnshire” at served and Wars. The was the to serve on He told of Linden

House on the Hargate occupied in his lifetime by two elderly spinsters, “the Misses Hilton”. Previous occupants had offended villagers who responded by banging pots and pans and shouting at them. Formerly a pair of cottages Linden House stands next to the site of the old jail. Alf’s mother and her brother and sister each lived over a hundred years. “Uncle Les” was a large character known for his mordant humour, telling visitors: My first wife died but the second wouldn’t. Well into his nineties he amazed everyone by cycling many miles daily to visit a lady friend.

Alf’s mother, Ethel, nee Freeman, remembered starting school at a brand new building in Holbeach (c1896) and the overpowering smell of fresh-cut timber. Despite her great age Mrs Halgarth recalled with passionate resentment as the youngest child “cutting chaff in the barn” when her father, a farmer, died, her exclusion from the family’s last Goodbye still raw. She also spoke about Royal Oak Day on her birthday in May (29th) when schoolchildren wore oak leaves to commemorate the restoration of King Charles II. Children without oak leaves were stung with nettles by the others. The Halgarths were Chapel people but Alf was buried in the parish churchyard unlike his mother and sister. His stone bears the sisterly comment: There was only one Alf. A true Christian, Joan Halgarth married a Baptist minister and is commemorated in a window at the chapel as well as among the graves. Nonconformists were regarded with suspicion by the Establishment and often suffered discrimination in jobs and housing.⁸⁴ Baptists tended to be overlooked in favour of Anglicans although well-served by a strong Chapel culture. The foundation stone of the present building on Old Main Road was laid in 1876.

At the Gedney end of the old Hargate is the occupied by the local “bobby” who patrolled Opposite is the spacious five acre parish Fleet Parish Council for the village in 1976.

former Police house the village with his bicycle. field, allotments bought by The 1960s saw the closure of the railways and HGVs taking their place for haulage. Reflecting the old carting industry most of the nation’s fresh produce is carried on Lincolnshire highways. Mayfair Close and Penricsway on Old Main Road were previously lorry yards, the latter a horse farm with smithy before that.

Near the church is a former blacksmith’s small brick building next to the inn, The Billet; a billet shop, a building former Crooket was a beam. Seth's Mobility provides wheelchairs in place of a steam threshing machine that once made tea for village festivities. The nearby Village Hall was the venue for social events often ending with a procession along footpaths to the Seven Acre field by the church. Wartime saw the field reclaimed for food production before tulips became a main crop to be replaced by daffodils. A new rectory was built in the Seventies and a

London family bought

Battleford Hall as a holiday home. The Lathams contributed much to the history of Fleet and were greatly missed when they left. Along Bensgate was a pub called The Steam Whistle now a green barn. Facing Ravensdyke Bridge also known as Saturdaybridge, travellers received respite at The Ravensclough inn, now a private house; clough meant sluice. Further south was The Golden Ball inn now considered to belong to Holbeach St Johns.

On the Hargate opposite the Chapel was the Angel Inn before it became a grocer's shop known as Crosby's with a Restaurant. The Bowling Mayfair Close. The Rose crown were official stamps twice survived plans to brick built barn. On the on Roman Bank remains post office, now The Willows Green inn no longer exists near and Crown still thrives; the rose and indicating duty paid. The Bull has change it. Old Barn Court replaced a marsh north of the A17 The Five Bells only as a house name.

Pacific Fleet Peacetime has seen many changes. At the junction with Hocklesgate is the former bakery; further along Old Main Road is a former butcher's shop both victims of modern marketing economics. Smart new developments replace old orchards and strawberry fields. However the shifting sands and treacherous waters that betrayed King John in 1216 can still prove costly to hapless venturers eight centuries later. Without local knowledge and adequate support the most confident entrepreneur can sink his profits along with his new-build foundations. A West Country developer notoriously lost money, his own and the taxpayers', by raising site levels to cope with drainage. Taking no such risks a local builder hammered three piles, one on top of the other, into the subsoil for stability at Penricsway (named for a favourite hound). Brownfield sites have stood the test of time but are inevitably scarce. Ever feisty and resolutely independent, fenlanders continue to portray in microcosm the characteristics of our island race, yet mingling with incomers as tide and spring once together lapped the reeds of Fleet Haven. Superficially similar to other fen villages amid tranquil oceans of sea-green cabbages beneath vast, ever-changing cloudscapes, Fleet is unique in history and provenance with an exclusive appeal both mysterious and enticing.

Be you going, be you coming,
Be you man, be you woman,
Be you early, be you late,
Be aware of Flete Hergate.

For more church history and other details including Minutes of Fleet PC 1924-1976 see website: <http://myweb.tiscali.co.uk/woolyweb/jmbw/index.html>

Further related documents are available upon request.

References

- ¹ Willock, Colin: Kenzie: The Wild Goose Man A Deutsch 1962; CW Obit Anglia TV 12 Apr 2005 online ² Neilson, N: A Terrier of Fleet OUP 1920/British Academy Records of Social and Economic History ³ Available from LCC Library ⁴ Neilson, N: A Terrier of Fleet plx ⁵ Wheeler, W: History of the Fens 1868 repr. 1990 p100 ⁶ Personal local information
- ⁷ Hallam H: 'Salt making in the Lincolnshire Fenland in the middle ages' Lincs Archit & Archae 1955-60 ⁸ Personal info ⁹ Cambridge University Committee for Aerial Photography
- ¹⁰ National Monument Report Number: TF 32 SE 4 Unique Identifier: 353734
- ¹¹ Dugdale, MacDonald, Durant among others quote Tacitus and Heroditus
- ¹² McDonald, Grant: Historical Notices p240 ¹³ Loyn, H L: The English Church 954-1154 Pearson 2000 p2 ¹⁴ Lincs Past & Present No 70 2007-08 ¹⁵ Neilson, N: A Terrier of Fleet ¹⁶ ibid plxii
- ¹⁷ Early Yorks Charters iii, 318; VCH Lancashire i, 319ff; Lloyd and Stenton, eds., Sir Christopher Hatton's Book of Seals, no 149. ¹⁸ Runciman, S: The History of the Crusades Vol I CUP 1957 p100 ¹⁹ Castle Acre Cartulary transcribed by Prof. Harper-Bill ²⁰ Neilson Terrier pxxxv et al ²¹ CA Cartulary ²² ibid ²³ ibid ²⁴ Neilson Terrier p138 ²⁵ Castle Acre Cartulary Folio 77r ²⁶ Neilson Terrier p120 ²⁷ th
- Lees, Beatrice: The Records of the Templars in the 12 Century Brit.Ac./OUP 1935 pclxxix ²⁸ Neilson Terrier p35 ²⁹ Neilson Terrier plxxxix ³⁰ Owen, D: Church and Society in Medieval Lincolnshire, History of Lincs Vol V, LHS 1971p57 ³¹ Macdonald, Grant: Historical Notices of the Parish of Holbeach pub. Foster, K Lynn 1890 p22 ³² ibid p26 ³³ Butler & Given-Wilson: Medieval Monasteries of Great Britain M Joseph 1979 p21 ³⁴ Lees: Templars map ³⁵ Toulmin Smith, Lucy: Leland's Itinerary Centaur Press 1907/1964 p147 ³⁶ Runciman: Crusades Vol 1 ³⁷ Lees: pxli, pcli, lxix ³⁸ Neilson: Terrier plxi
- ³⁹ Delderfield, Eric: British Inn Signs David & Charles 1972 p22; Larwood & Hotten: English Inn Signs Chatto & Windus 1951; Sixty Minute Sage pub Bell's
- ⁴⁰ Healy, H: Lincs Past & Present No.23 ⁴¹ Lees: Templars pclxxiii ⁴² Hallam, H: Settlement and Society CUP 1965 p198 ⁴³ McDonald: Historical Notices p243 ⁴⁴ Mt Holyoke College Archives, USA ⁴⁵ Hallam: Settlement and Society p182 ⁴⁶ Leland Itinerary Vol 4 Appendix I (b) ⁴⁷ Neilson Terrier p112 fol.56
- ⁴⁸ Cutts: Dictionary of the Church of England 2nd ed. SPCK 1889 p94

⁴⁹ Neilson: Terrier plxxvi ⁵⁰

ibid p22-32 Toloneum p31

⁵¹ 1842 White's Directory; Marratt, W: The History of Lincolnshire pub. at Boston 1816

⁵² Leland: p147 ⁵³ Neilson: p73 "Dominus cexl.acras in Fletewode" ⁵⁴ ibid p72 ⁵⁵ ibid plxii

⁵⁶ Wheeler, W: History of the Fens 1868 repr.1990

⁵⁷ Neilson: plxi, plxii ⁵⁸ ibid pp53,61,132,138 ⁵⁹ SHIDB map of drains ⁶⁰ ibid plxxxii ⁶¹ ibid see Introduction: Ch III, also p89 ⁶²

McDonald p51 ⁶³ ibid p83 ⁶⁴ Ticehurst, NF: Swan Marks of Lincs p59-141 ⁶⁵ Neilson plxxxiv

⁶⁶ The Records of the Commissioners of Sewers in the Parts of Holland, 1547-1603 Lincs Record Society:

⁶⁷ Boston Port Book ⁶⁸ White's Directory 1842 ⁶⁹ candles ⁷⁰ Fleet, Lincolnshire, Terrier 1731 transcribed by the late Rev Douglas Edwards ⁷¹

1731 The Gentleman's Magazine August Promotions ⁷² De la Noy, Michael: The House of Hervey A history of tainted talent Constable 2001 ⁷³ Heath R.(ed:Dockray) The Victorian Peasant. Alan Sutton 1989

⁷⁴ ibid

⁷⁵ GM most years from 1731 to 1741 ⁷⁶ Early Wills transcribed by J Latham & D Edwards

18th century wills transcr. Rev Edwards

⁷⁷ ibid p14

⁷⁸ Stukeley, W: Itinerarium Curiosum 1724 ⁷⁹ A History of the County of Cambridge and the Isle of Ely: Volume 4: City of Ely; Ely, N. and S. Witchford and Wisbech Hundreds (2002), 'Wisbech Hundred: Outwell and Upwell', pp. 206-219. ⁸⁰ 1842 White's Dir. ⁸¹ 1905 Kelly's Directory ⁸² Personal info from late Brian Thorpe, grandson ⁸³ 1937 Kelly's ⁸⁴ Personal information

Essential reading

Paul, J & B: Wood Lane Log Firs Publishing, Canwick, Lincoln 2001

Latham, Daniels, Spain, Edwards: South of the Wash :Tydd St. Mary to Spalding privately published 1995